1. Assesses learners’ prior knowledge, learning needs, and college and career readiness goals

   - Collects and reviews information on learners’ content knowledge; prior learning experiences; and learning needs from school transcripts, questionnaires, and learner interviews.

   - On the first day of class, the teacher of a multilevel English as a second language (ESL) class identifies learners’ needs and proficiency levels by asking learners to do quickwrites to describe themselves. The students can use pictures, words, sentences, and/or paragraphs. These quickwrites, coupled with short student surveys about their learning backgrounds, are placed in student portfolios and will be used in future student-teacher interviews.

2. Monitors and manages student learning and performance through data

ADULT EDUCATION TEACHER Competencies

1. Assesses learners’ prior knowledge, learning needs, and college and career readiness goals
   - Collects and updates information on learners’ goals through interviews and/or questionnaires
   - An Adult Basic Education (ABE) literacy teacher administers learner self-assessments at the beginning, middle, and end of the semester. The literacy teacher also collects work samples (e.g., student writings, student-made dictionaries, and quizzes) and helps the learners organize the information into portfolios. The ABE literacy teacher uses these portfolios during progress conferences and with learners who are feeling frustrated with their progress.

An Adult Secondary Education (ASE) bridge to college mathematics instructor supplements the results of the program’s standardized mathematics assessment by developing an assessment that incorporates mathematics content from a high school equivalency (HSE) exam and also from a local college placement exam. By reviewing results from both exams, the instructor is able to identify learners who would benefit from a bridge to college mathematics course, show learners why they would benefit from the course, and guide decisions about content for the course.

An ABE reading teacher finds that current learners, in their previous reading classes, answered basic comprehension questions from books written for adult emerging readers. With this information, the ABE reading teacher designs a series of activities that deepen learners’ reading comprehension of slightly more challenging texts. The first activity asks learners to write letters to a character in the book, advising that character about how to solve a problem he or she is facing.
ADULT EDUCATION TEACHER Competencies

Competency 2: Sets learning goals and a course of study

- Designs courses of study that link course content to learners' interests and goals and expose learners to new ideas and experiences that may help them to refine or change their goals over time.

- The teacher of a low-level ESL class supplies a diagram of possible student pathways upon completion of this class. Learners are asked to identify where they are in the diagram and where they would like to go. They then make similar diagrams of the school systems in their native countries and share the diagrams with the class.

ADULT EDUCATION TEACHER Competencies

1. Monitors and manages student learning and performance through data

- Monitors student progress and identifies areas for improvement.
- Uses data to adjust teaching strategies and intervention plans.

2. Sets learning goals and a course of study

- Establishes clear, achievable goals for students.
- Develops a comprehensive course outline that meets learning objectives.

3. Sets learning goals and a course of study

- Supports students’ continued learning and college and career goals by providing access to advisors and counselors or planning tools.

4. Plans and delivers high-quality, evidence-based instruction

- Designs engaging lesson plans that incorporate evidence-based teaching strategies.
- Evaluates instructional effectiveness and adapts teaching methods accordingly.

Sample Illustration

The teacher of an intermediate ESL class invites a college and career counselor to visit the class. Before the visit, the teacher presents a lesson on types of questions that a college and career counselor might be able to answer. Each learner identifies three questions to ask. The teacher collects the questions, identifies the 10 most common questions, and supplies them ahead of time to the counselor so that the counselor can tailor her presentation. At the end of the presentation, the counselor sets up one-on-one appointments so learners can ask personal questions.

Performance Indicators

At the beginning of a semester, an HSE teacher administers a learning goal assessment. At the end of an instructional unit, the HSE teacher administers a teacher-developed formative assessment. The HSE teacher shares the results with learners and works with them to tie the results to their learning goals (e.g., "I'll be able to identify main ideas more easily by the end of the semester"), not just global skill improvements (e.g., "I'll be a better reader").

An intermediate-level ESL teacher collects two writing samples—a personal story and a summary of a short newspaper article—from students in the first 3 weeks of class. The teacher analyzes the samples for learner strengths and weaknesses in idea development, grammar and usage, and vocabulary use. The teacher then plans a series of learning stations so that students can work independently, in small groups, or with the teacher to practice specific language skills.

In an intermediate ABE classroom, the teacher, after reviewing a midterm standardized assessment, notes that two students are having similar difficulties in independently evaluating information about reading passages. The teacher finds a reading passage or text of interest to both of them and asks them to work together to analyze the reading passage and put it into a classification chart.

A bridge to college instructor is conducting a lesson on persuasive writing. Students are reading a text that includes data, presented in a graph, which appear to support the writer's point of view. The instructor observes that the students are unable to discern how the scale of the graph affects the appearance of the data. The instructor decides to interrupt the lesson and asks students to use different scales to graph the same data. Through this impromptu work, students gain the ability to manipulate the appearance of a graph and to identify this manipulation in graphs created by others.

An ESL civics teacher plans a learning unit on the system of checks and balances in the three branches of the U.S. government. The teacher creates a flowchart to show the responsibilities and role of each branch. The teacher then assigns students to groups to research one of the branches, asking each group to provide guiding questions about the following: how many members the branch has, how the members of the branch are chosen to serve, the amount of time they serve, and the duties they undertake. The students are scheduled for time in the program’s computer lab to do Internet research and develop their presentations. Several days after the students make their presentations, the teacher creates a scenario so that each group of students can represent a branch of government to pass a law. The students are asked to create a classroom process for passing the law.

An ASE bridge to college instructor ties a standards-based lesson on writing arguments to college readiness and, specifically, to an HSE exam. The teacher begins the lesson with a writing activity that prompts students to identify what they have just done and learned (e.g., "I have been working on..."; "I am able to..."). At the end of the lesson, the instructor reviews the purpose, summarizes student learning, and previews what students will be working on next (rather than previewing homework or textbook pages to be covered in subsequent lessons).

Throughout a lesson, an ABE instructor checks in with students through a series of questions and answers to determine their understanding of a text under study. The instructor circulates around the room as students work on a writing assignment to make sure they understand the directions and to check on their progress in completing the assignment. Every 4 weeks, the instructor provides students with a culminating assignment. Through a combination of written comments, individual student conferences, and classroom discussions, the instructor provides prompt and accurate feedback on each student’s progress in mastering the targeted standards.

<td>An ABE writing teacher introduces peer review techniques by showing a short video of two learners engaged in a peer review session. The students and the teacher discuss the session: “What kinds of questions did the students ask each other? Do you think Student B will be able to write a better paper because of his classmate’s input?” The teacher also asks, “Do you think showing your writing to your peers helps you? Why or why not?” The teacher then introduces language expressions and strategies used in peer review, and the learners practice in role-playing situations. The teacher observes the role-play, makes note of common challenges, and addresses those challenges in a subsequent lesson.</td>

An ASE bridge to business teacher shows learners how to create and interpret several types of data representation as part of social studies, science, and mathematics instruction. Once learners have shown that they can create data graphs accurately by hand, the teacher guides them to create these representations using electronic spreadsheets (such as Excel). The learners integrate these high-quality graphs into slide presentations, such as PowerPoint, for classroom demonstrations and presentations. Facility with these technological tools is very beneficial to these learners, who intend to enter business careers.

An ABE literacy teacher teaches a multilevel class in which a few of the learners have not yet learned the basic mechanisms of using a mouse and navigating a computer environment. The teacher introduces the students to several online tools that provide hands-on practice with the mouse. The teacher gives more proficient learners a list of recommended literacy websites and asks them to find the websites on the Internet, describe the purpose of each site, and rate the site (1=not useful, 2=useful, 3=very useful). The class members share their reactions to the usefulness of the sites they visited.

A teacher of a multilevel ESL class divides the class into four mixed ability groups. The teacher chooses a current news topic and then asks the learners to visit three news outlets (e.g., a local news site, an international news site, and an ethnic media site) in whatever language the learners choose to read. The teacher asks the learners to work together to find and compare the kinds of information found at each site on the topic, using the following questions: “What article(s) did you find on this topic? What are the headlines? Are the articles on the home page? What information do you find? What photos do you see? What is different across the sites? What is similar? Why do you think there are differences and similarities?"

Then, in groups, learners are asked to decide by consensus which characteristics they deem most important and to rank them. Finally, learners are asked to read the rest of the article and report if they agree with the author’s conclusions, based on their groups’ priorities.

Learners in an intermediate ASE class are interested in working in food services. The teacher develops a science unit, constructing research questions associated with the leavening properties of different ingredients such as yeast, baking powder, and baking soda. The teacher creates open-ended research questions that provide guidelines for inquiry, including the following: "What are common leavening agents in food preparation? In what types of recipes and in what combinations are those agents used and why?" The teacher concludes the lesson by having students work in groups to develop recipes that include those agents and try the recipes at home. Learners share the results of their experiments.

A bridge to manufacturing teacher presents learners with a design problem within a unit on measurement. The learners are given a certain number of wall sections of a certain height and width so that they can create a variety of rectangular, prism-shaped toolshed designs. Learners sketch the possibilities and determine the measurements that will maximize the floor area and capacity of the shed. After the students submit their designs, the class members move to the program’s computer lab, where they search common shed fabrication designs and are given the opportunity to revise their original designs.

Communicates high expectations of learners and motivates them to persist to meet their goals

- Encourages learners to ask questions and seek out help when they are experiencing difficulty

An ASE teacher demonstrates through daily interactions with learners that trying out ideas, being uncertain, and struggling are a normal part of the learning process. Rather than extending praise only to “correct” answers and showing embarrassment or disappointment in response to learner mistakes, the teacher gives praise for effort and resilience and emphasizes how much can be learned from both errors and correct responses.
Competency: Effectively communicates to motivate and engage learners

1. Communicates high expectations of learners and motivates them to persist to meet their goals

   Builds learner confidence by providing feedback on progress in relationship to learning goals and encouragement and clear feedback about the steps needed to continue moving toward goal attainment.

2. Plans and delivers high-quality, evidence-based instruction

Builds learner confidence by providing feedback on progress in relationship to learning goals and encouragement and clear feedback about the steps needed to continue moving toward goal attainment.

A literacy-level ABE teacher schedules one-on-one meetings with students to discuss progress in relationship to their learning goals (while other students are engaged in small group collaborative work). In one of these meetings, a learner who had come to the program with the goal of obtaining a high school credential expresses his frustration with his perceived level of progress. The teacher acknowledges that a high school credential is a long-term goal and describes the short-term and midterm goals that were established earlier in the semester to reach that longer term goal. The teacher then reviews the current progress the learner is making in relationship to immediate goals for the semester.

- Builds stop, reflect, and check-in points in lesson plans to provide learners with opportunities to clarify, confirm, or deepen their understanding of the lesson task or content.

During the course of every lesson, a bridge to college teacher employs several questioning strategies to help students fully understand the lesson objectives. Rather than relying on an individual student response to represent class-wide understanding, the teacher creates a classroom culture where all learners listen to, critique, and speak in support of other learners’ ideas. The teacher also routinely presses learners not to simply provide “answers” to problems or questions but to always explain and justify their process and thinking.

   - Uses diversity of learners' home languages, cultures (ethnic, racial, sexual, religious, class based) and prior language/literacy learning experiences as a resource for learning and building a classroom.

   Example: An ABE literacy teacher invites learners to create a class calendar of different holidays and festivals celebrated by learners in the class. The teacher uses the calendar to reinforce the spelling of days of the week and months of the year. In addition, the class votes for those holidays they will celebrate in class. The teacher invites learners to share cultural practices they'd like others to know about. For example, learners of Muslim faith may fast during Ramadan and may refuse food at break time.

A teacher reviews mathematics texts, looking for problems that can be used in an ASE mathematics class. The teacher discovers a few problems that are mathematically rich but that contain gender and other cultural stereotypes. The teacher recognizes that the problems, as written, would offend some learners, would create a classroom atmosphere that undermined trust, and would distract from the content of the lesson. The teacher rewrites the problems to remove those references.

1. Possesses content area knowledge and teaching skills required for subjects and populations taught

   Connects professional learning to instructional practice by implementing what has been learned, evaluating the impacts, and refining practice going forward.

   An ABE mathematics teacher wants to improve learners’ conceptual understanding of the differences in measuring length, area, and volume. The teacher attends professional development workshops that describe the importance of using concrete manipulatives in developing these concepts. After using these tools in the classroom, the teacher believes that the learners have a clearer notion of measurement concepts but wants to do a better job of linking the manipulatives to learners’ understanding of measurement units. The teacher plans adjustments to address this weakness in the next cycle.

   - An intermediate ESL teacher’s second language reading pedagogy relies largely on experience teaching high school English literature. The teacher decides to join a study circle with other local ESL teachers to improve her knowledge base and strengthen her practice as an ESL reading teacher. The teacher is able to make adjustments to instructional practice, with improved focus on alphabets, reading fluency, and vocabulary development.

   - A team of ASE teachers decide they want to improve their science instruction. They read and discuss a series of articles on climate change and work together to develop questions that are focused on critique and evaluation of the information presented, and they devise activities and experiments that will be appropriate at an ASE level. After teaching the lessons, the group reconvenes to share observations of student learning and revise the lessons for later use.

ADULT EDUCATION TEACHER Competencies

1. Monitors and manages student learning and performance through data
   - An intermediate ASE teacher, while participating in a teachers’ meeting about the institution’s goals and vision, realizes that there is a great deal of emphasis on obtaining a high school diploma, but little emphasis is directed toward passing the high school credential test. The teacher decides to write for the institution blog in order to raise awareness. She submits an article on the diversity of learner needs and how preparation courses can be useful for some learners who have differing needs from the learners who will receive high school diplomas.

2. Participates in professional development networks and learning communities
   - Participates in the development and implementation of a shared vision among members of a professional network or learning community, with the intent of creating new and improved conditions for teachers and learners.

Competency: Pursues professionalism and continually builds knowledge and skills

- Participates in professional development networks and learning communities
- Shares, gives, and accepts feedback related to student learning through professional networks and learning communities

Sample Illustrations:

A group of ABE and ASE teachers agree to engage in a semester-long project focused on improving the amount and quality of "learner talk" in their classes. The teachers devise an observation protocol that they use while observing each other’s classes to record questions and directions that seem to encourage or stifle productive learner discourse. Over time, the teachers begin to adjust their teaching practices in response to patterns they notice through the project.

Sample Illustration:

An ABE literacy teacher is concerned about nonparticipation patterns during phonics activities among a few learners. The teacher starts a teaching journal to focus attention on the learners’ behaviors and her own reactions. At a teachers’ meeting, the teacher shares her reflective process and observations, and when colleagues acknowledge similar concerns, the teacher and colleagues decide to undertake a collaborative journal writing project. Over time, the teachers are able to broaden their views on the challenges of nonparticipation, question their assumptions about classroom expectations, and devise a plan for talking to the learners about their own expectations for classroom participation.
ADULT EDUCATION TEACHER Competencies

1. Refines instructional practices through reflection on experience, evidence, and data

- Understands the nature and purpose of teacher reflection tools (e.g., teaching journal/diary, self-observation, action research) and uses these tools in response to the local teaching context

2. Plans and delivers high-quality, evidence-based instruction

3. Monitors and manages student learning and performance through data

4. Effectively communicates to motivate and engage learners

A multilevel ESL teacher is concerned that all learners are not being reached and that the lower level learners are falling behind because the teacher hasn’t been able to give them enough time. The teacher teams up with a colleague to investigate how to improve the outcomes of these learners. The two teachers discuss the issue, and the teacher’s partner observes him and scripts what is observed, avoiding opinions. The teacher does the same observation and scripts for his partner, and they meet in conference to discuss their findings.

Competencies:

1. Plans and delivers high-quality, evidence-based instruction.
2. Monitors and manages student learning and performance through data.
3. Refines instructional practices through reflection on experience, evidence, and data.
4. Regularly seeks out opportunities to tap into current professional wisdom, empirical research, and theory as a vehicle for reflecting on and improving one’s own teaching.

Performance Indicators:

- Pursues professionalism and continually builds knowledge and skills.
- Effectively communicates to motivate and engage learners.
Regularly seeks opportunities to tap into current professional wisdom, empirical research, and theory as a vehicle for reflecting on and improving one’s own teaching.

An intermediate ASE teacher hears someone mention evidence-based reading instruction (EBRI) in a meeting but is not familiar with this teaching approach. The teacher searches for articles that describe the approach and research papers that might describe its effectiveness. She is more interested in the approach after consulting these sources but also recognizes how different EBRI is from her current practice. She decides to sign up for an online professional development course on EBRI before trying to employ this in the classroom.

Participates in and contributes to program improvement efforts

- Routinely shares instructional plans, data, and reflections on learner progress with other program staff members.
- Midway through the semester, an advanced ESL teacher meets with colleagues to discuss learners’ oral skill development. The teacher wants to know how to improve oral skill instruction to better prepare learners for the speaking demands of credit ESL classes. The teacher brings sample lesson plans, a list of curricular objectives, and video clips of learners working in groups and giving individual speeches.

An ASE bridge to college teacher notices that learners routinely arrive in class needing a great deal of work in writing and mathematics. These areas are the ones that the high school credential test-takers frequently fail. The teacher begins a program-wide discussion of possible responses to this problem. The program’s leadership, with additional input from teachers, decides that teachers will no longer teach all subjects that are tested. Instead, teachers will specialize in one or two content areas. In this way, teachers will be able to focus their energy and professional development activities on a narrower range of content that particularly interests them.

An intermediate ESL teacher sees that after completing his class, learners are not completing the next advanced ESL classes or ABE classes. The teacher believes that these learners are not comfortable moving to new classes that demand more academic rigor. The teacher suggests to the head of the ESL department that they create a transition course that will prepare learners for career and academic success. The pilot course is accepted, and the teacher is chosen to teach it.
