Gina knew something was not r____. It felt like every five minutes she had to run to the ladies' r____. When she went to the bathroom, it burned like mad. She went to the Urgent Care Clinic in her neighborhood. The doctor told her she had a UTI.

“What is that?” asked Gina.

“It’s an infec_____ of the urinary tract. It should feel quite a bit better after you start taking antibiotics. Do you have any allergies to medica_____s?”

“No,” said Gina.

“Is there a pharmacy you like to go to?” asked the doctor.

She gave him the name of a drug store a few blocks from her apart_____. They had a pharma_____ in the back.

“O.K.,” said the doctor. “We will call in your prescrip_____ for Trimox. You need to take one tablet two times a day. Take them until they are all gone, even if you feel better.”

Gina could hardly wait to get to the pharmacy. The burning was getting worse. When her prescrip_____ was ready, the pharmacist came to the counter to talk to Gina.

“Your doctor called in a _____scription for Trimox. That is a brand name dr_____. We also have the generic medication, amoxicillin. It’s the same thing, but it does not cost as much. Would you like the generic instead of the brand name?”

“Is it really as g_____d?” asked Gina.

“It is exactly the same th_____. It just has a different name, and it costs less,” the pharmacist told her.

“O.K., I’ll take the _____eneric dru____,” said Gina.

The pharmacist told Gina how to take the medication. She gave her a page with informa_____ about amoxicillin. Then she said, “Be sure to keep taking this until it is all gone. Don’t stop even if you feel way better after one or two doses.”

“The doctor told me the same _____ing,” said Gina.

The pharmacist smiled. “Good. I hope you are feeling better soon.”

“Thank you,” said Gina. “Me t_____!”
